NEW WEAPON UPGRADES/TRAITS

VINTAGE

The weapon is not compatible with modern electronics. This can be the result of outdated manufacturing, physical age, or bad design. Physical upgrades are possible, but adding them requires additional work that costs twice the normal listed amount.

CAP & BALL

The weapon is designed to be hand loaded with separate powder, shot, and percussion cap. It takes three Complex Actions to reload each round; stopping before completing the reload activity requires the user to start over again. These weapons are annotated with "(cb)" in their Ammo entry.

USING THIS BOOK WITH SHADOWRUN, FIFTH EDITION

WEAPONS ACCESSORIES AND MODIFICATIONS

Not all of the standard modifications listed with the weapons in this book are detailed in Shadowrun, Fifth Edition. A book with more weapons and combat options called Run & Gun will be released shortly after this book, providing details on these modifications.

SPORTING RIFLES

Sporting Rifles are fired with the Longarms skill. Their range is as follows:

Short: 0-50 Medium: 51-250 Long: 251-500 Extreme: 501-750

FLAMETHROWERS

Flamethrowers are fired with the Exotic Ranged Weapons: Flamethrowers skill. They require a Complex Action to be made ready to fire. They can be used for Suppressive Fire (p. 179, SR5). They also can be used to attack multiple targets; using a Complex Action means the shooter can attack with a fanning motion, striking up to three targets (as long as they are all within the weapon's range and each target is within four meters of the others). This uses two units of the flamethrower's ammo capacity.

Flamethrowers deal Fire damage (p. 171, SR5). Their range is listed with each individual flamethrower.

COLT NEW MODEL REVOLVER

(HOLDOUT PISTOL)

The New Model Revolver is Colt's return to the small-revolver market, launched with a marketing campaign aimed at young homeowners and small security firms. The New Model is manufactured in a variety of small caliber and is largely of conventional design. The cylinder uses a simple left-side drop to allow rapid reloading with the appropriate manufacturer-approved speed loader. This model is only produced at Colt's Connecticut facility and has largely remained rare outside of northeastern UCAS. Inside the UCAS, citizens can be proud to purchase from one of their homegrown success stories. Trust the quality of a proven manufacturer. Trust the Legend™.

- A number of these were dropped into Baltimore's shadow market a few months ago. Lone Star removed their official endorsement of the pistol two weeks later.
- Sunshine

- It's another small-caliber, no-frills pistol put on the market for civilian consumption. It poses little real threat to government or corporate security teams.
- Hard Exit

- For a cheap piece of crap, it's surprisingly accurate. I managed to shoot a 2cm group at nearly 30 meters with one.

COLT AGENT SPECIAL

(LIGHT PISTOL)

The Agent Special has been one of Colt's bestsellers since its introduction over a century ago, and continuing updates and upgrades keep it more than relevant. The weapon's large caliber makes it popular with shooters who prefer hitting power over range. The short barrel also reduces the round's penetrative power, but the ability to use the same ammunition as a heavy pistol means that some organizations are turning to this steady performer to simplify their logistics.

Note: This weapon uses the taser range table and heavy pistol ammunition.

- A few minor security companies have starting issuing these to their guards to replace the older Fichetti security models. The guards lose some ammo capacity, but whatever they hit, they hurt.
- Snopes

- Wolverine Security authorized them as a backup to their normal large-caliber pistols. I guess an accountant explained they could save money and make bigger holes in people at the same time. Win-win.
- /dev/grrl

- The reduction in warehousing and purchasing costs can be significant for some organizations, but I doubt a company as large as Wolverine will see significant enough savings to worry about phasing out a small pistol and its ammunition.
- Mr. Bonds

- Fun fact: The pistol is named the "agent," but no intelligence organizations have officially added them to their inventories.

COLT FUTURE FRONTIER

(HEAVY PISTOL)

This large-frame pistol harkens back to the days of the Wild West with its classic grip and stylistic elements. Combined with modern manufacturing techniques and metallurgy, the Future Frontier provides the discriminating shooter with the best of both worlds. A redesign of the spring mechanism allows for ease of maintenance and replacement by certified personnel, while the enlarged cylinder handles a number of nostalgic calibers and propellant loads. This is a thorough redesign of a pistol that helped expand a nation, providing yet another reason to Trust the Legend™.

- What a load of drek. The primary suggested loads for this pistol are unjacketed compressed light-metal bullets. Who uses those things?
- Bull

- The Wild West Reenactment Society switched to them for all competitions after the green movement managed to outlaw unjacketed lead at a number of their ranges.
- Glitch

- And who here is likely to use one of these, Glitch? I doubt anyone even considers this a decent home-defense piece.
- Hard Exit

- Perhaps not, but I had a client who kept a pair of these loaded in a wall display. They came in handy when the assassin brought his assault team friends to the house with him. They made big enough holes in the window for the client to get out while the assailants were trying to figure out what was going on. Having a weapon hiding in plain sight is not a bad idea.

FIANCHETTI MILITARY 100

(MACHINE PISTOL)

The Military 100 offers accurate automatic fire on a large-pistol frame. Fianchetti's engineers have integrated a full spectrum smartlink sensor into the weapon's frame, increasing accuracy in semi-automatic and fully automatic operation. The model features a rigid, reinforced polymer frame with fully integrated diagnostic sensors linked to the smartlink's data transfer protocols, ensuring the operator full access to their weapon's status at all times.

- Not very effective against armor—did the designers have something against SINless people or Barrens dwellers or whatever? It seems designed to handle unarmored opponents more than military personnel.
- Slamm-0!

- I doubt there will be many calls for real military conflict soon. The Aztlan/Amazonia thing showed how random results of that can be, and how destructive to things governments and corporations value. But there is always a call to shove the masses back into their place.
- Aufheben

- This is not a new development or anything. The lack of armor penetration has always been a problem for machine pistols. Generally the ability to make a small weapon controllable in automatic modes requires smaller rounds.

CAVALIER EVANATOR

(MACHINE PISTOL)

Utilizing the latest in projectile development, this surprisingly controllable lightweight automatic is capable of providing suppressive fire under nearly any circumstances. The slanted magazine reduces the number of jams due to magazine spring malfunction, while the integrated laser sight ensures the user sees exactly where they are aiming. The electronic firing mechanism ensures the complete combustion of the caseless propellant while reducing the perceived recoil to the firer. When fitted with its standard folding stock, the Evanator can serve as the primary weapon in a close-quarter engagement.

- It's nearly impossible to carry this thing concealed without a shoulder strap—the manufacturer's approved holster leaves a huge bump anyone can identify as a concealed weapon.
- Fianchetto

- I guess that depends on the size of your frame to begin with. But I'm not worrying about this one any more—I tried it out briefly, but the lack of penetrative power had me switch away from it soon afterwards.
- Mihoshi Oni

- I know someone selling cases of these cheap if you're looking to arm a group up quick. But you'll need to source the ammo on your own.

REMINGTON SUPPRESSOR

(MACHINE PISTOL)

The first modern automatic pistol design offered by Remington, the Suppressor is intended for paramilitary organizations and government agencies requiring compact automatic weapons. The design integrates a number of European stylistic elements with modern automated manufacturing quality control methods, resulting in finely tuned tolerances intended to allow the user to accurately engage any target. The weapon is shipped with a detachable sound suppressor, allowing the user to reduce their audio signature at the expense of concealment.

- While I appreciate the attention to the ergonomic details, I'm less appreciative of the poorly manufactured action and barrel. I know they charge extra for a match barrel, but you shouldn't have to buy it for reasonable accuracy.
- Mihoshi Oni

- The action is a pretty simple open-bolt, blowback design. The problem really is the barrel's rifling—the twist rate hurts accuracy at standard combat ranges.
- Beaker

- They rock in the latest patch to Action Shooter, though, and that's all that matters to me!

ARES SIGMA-3

(SUBMACHINE GUN)

Ares has released their latest submachine gun design for law enforcement personnel worldwide. The Sigma-3's unique drum magazine ensures operators have the ability to conduct a forced entry without having to worry about their ammunition supply at critical moments. The integral carrying handle/powered slide mount allows operators options beyond the internal smartlink, allowing optimization to meet tactical necessities. When using the collapsible stock, shooters have consistently exceeded organizational marksmanship standards, proving the quality design and manufacturing techniques.

- According to recent disclosures, Lone Star has purchased more of these than Knight Errant. Apparently their Austin-based units like the enhanced magazine capacity, although it might just be a symptom of the city's tension.
- Mr. Bonds

- No, Lone Star just likes spraying bullets whenever they can get away with it. The Azzie-related issues in Austin are just another excuse.
- Hard Exit

- It's still surprising Ares went with a drum magazine for a submachine gun. Reloading the drum takes forever without a winding tool, which of course Ares sells separately.
- Beaker

- Despite what you see on the trid, most firefights during a shadowrun last less than three seconds. The large drum has enough rounds for nearly six seconds of suppressive fire with some left over. If you're shooting it out with a Lone Star lackey that long, you deserve what you get.

CAVALIER ARMS GLADIUS

(SUBMACHINE GUN)

A simple design intended for street officers requiring temporary increases in firepower, the Gladius combines modern electronics with an easy-to-maintain design. The weapon can also be used to equip a hastily raised militia; its simple operation and maintenance requirements make it ideal for citizen-soldiers. The stamped metal receiver is key to the weapon's strength, while proprietary recoil absorbers ensure accuracy and the electronics package retains calibration.

SHIAWASE ARMS MONSOON

(ASSAULT RIFLE)

The latest addition to Shiawase's "Magazine Barrel" line, the Monsoon is a soldier's dream, with the ammunition contained within the barrels. The Monsoon resists the environment's harshest conditions and remains nearly maintenance free. As long as the user simply needs to ensure the barrels are not heavily plugged up and the bullets will fly toward their intended target, aided by the integral smartlink system, which is protected in its own shock-proof housing.

COLT INCEPTION

(ASSAULT RIFLE)

Colt's latest entry into the para-military market, the Inception replaces the venerable M23 and asserts Colt's continued dominance in new this lucrative market segment. The Inception comes with an integral bipod for long-range engagements, which only serves to further amplify its exceptional accuracy. KRUPP ARMS KRIEGFAUST

(ASSAULT RIFLE)

A veteran of the Kilamanjaro cleansing, the Kriegfaust was designed to equip the larger members of a military command with a robust weapon suited to their needs. The drum magazine is better suited to larger hands and less likely to be dropped in high-adrenaline situations. The Kriegfaust also has a frame-mounted imaging scope, to ensure the shooter is able to get the maximum ballistic performance from the weapon's large-caliber rounds.

- I'd be impressed if the ad didn't read like a Humanis "You're too stupid to own a gun" brochure. Not every one of us needs to have reinforced weapons just to carry them. You treat them with respect and they don't fail you when needed.
- Mihoshi Oni

- Personally, I was impressed with some of the marketing campaign. The whole "War Fist" ad series struck a chord with some of the ork population and spawned a children's cartoon series, ensuring the weapon will have at least a low-rate, long-term production as the youth become preconditioned to wanting one.
- Dr. Spin

- Don't look now, but the Greek Minotaur Legion just gave it their official "Battle-Training Approved" endorsement. Whichever bureaucrat thought of using a government-backed military unit as a quality endorsement facility was a genius.
- Baka Dabora

SBD-44

(ASSAULT RIFLE)

A footnote of Euro War history, the SBd-44 was a hastily constructed weapon developed to equip Germany's equally hastily raised panzer grenadier units. Inspired by a weapon developed for equally desperate times and updated to fire modern ammunition, the SBd-44 was primarily constructed with a focus on quantity rather than the accuracy or quality typically associated with German manufactured items. The weapon was also rapidly phased out of production following the Alliance's disintegration, making original production run versions rare today. Krupp still offers the weapon in their corporate security catalog, but no known orders have been processed in nearly twenty years.

- Red Anya

- I've fired one, once. I'm not sure what I hated more—the rattle from the upper/lower receiver joint or how flimsy the pistol grip felt. I could barely keep it on the target on semi-automatic. Everything seemed just a little off.
- Marcos

- The new nano-manufacturing capabilities largely took over the immediate demand for these weapons, the AK-147 is in some ways the direct descendent of this design. It also reduced the prices on stamped metal manufacturing shops, like the ones originally used to produce the SBd-44.

WINCHESTER MODEL 2066

(SHOTGUN)

Featured in the recent trid hit "Mad AIs at Dawn," the Model 2066 is a development of a classic Winchester shotgun design, modernized for today's sportsman, combined with a robot slayer. The receiver is constructed with high-tensile steel, improving the weapon's ability to handle custom hunting loads, while the case-ejection system has been strengthened for shooters who prefer the modern, longer cartridges. The level-action has been designed with self-lubricating parts to ensure smooth operation and loading, which is a critical factor for those caught by surprise in wild country.

- This is an example of why Winchester has largely concentrated on the civilian market. Sales dried up almost as soon as the Ute Nation was no longer a large customer. The production line only puts together complete weapons for three months a year—it's used to produce spare parts for other weapons the rest of the year.
- Dr. Spin

- There isn't much special about the shotgun. It's pretty solid for a twenty-year-old design, but more recent designs are easier to integrate into a PAN.
- Beaker

- Like most of the people here are going to use a weapon like this. A few of the hackers here might appreciate the laser sight to help their accuracy, but I don't know who else would give it a shot. And that group doesn't matter much (no offense, admin overlords), because usually if they're using a weapon, the run has pretty much already failed.

SHIAWASE ARMS RAIN

(SHOTGUN)

Shiawase's latest entry into the civilian arms market, the Rain features the "Magazine Barrel" popular with many organizations, as it simplifies record keeping and maintenance as the barrel is replaced at the same time as the ammunition. The Rain currently has a number of different shot types available, with Matrix support recommendations based on the laws of your particular locale.

- I like the standard retractable stock. It makes it more convenient for smaller people, and the sealed ammunition makes it fairly maintenance-light so I can spend time on other things.
- Clockwork

- I'm not sure who this weapon is really marketed to. The specs scream law enforcement, but the Matrix campaign seems to be aimed at homeowners.
- Dr. Spin

- The weapon almost looks like a technology in search of an application. I understand the whole muzzle-loading thing for pistols as it allows for increased capacity in a smaller space, and it also works for point-defense systems, but a rifle-sized application seem too large to be practical.

CAVALIER FALCHION

(SHOTGUN)

Cavalier's companion to the Sheriff, the Falchion is designed to be part of a shooter's integrated Personal Area Network. The Falchion's smartlink system painlessly synchronizes with the user's commlink, providing visual cues when performing a weapon switch in a tactical situation. The advanced safety system and lack of manual controls ensures the weapon cannot be turned against its user. Also, in keeping with the Sheriff's popular visual customization options, the Falchion is available in a number of different colors and decorative patterns.

- Cavalier has started selling matching appearance modification kits for the Falchion and Sheriff. I'm not sure I like the styles they're selling, but the line has increased their profitability by three percent for the last quarter. I never realized gun buyers were also part of the vanity market.
- Mr. Bonds

- I don't know about the customization kits, but Lone Star units patrolling Gary, Indiana have started carrying the Sheriff/Falchion combo. And no, I will not tell you why I was there.
- Traveler Jones

- The trigger removal makes them pretty worthless to go-gangers looking to punk out a patrol or two, so I can understand switching some officers over to them. The bad part is when someone carrying these runs into a real runner team with a decent hacker.

SPRINGFIELD 2003

(SPORTING RIFLE)

A modern remake of a classic rifle, the Springfield 2003 is a hunter's dream come true. The bolt action is now computer verified to be within tolerance, and it utilizes the latest in laser-measuring tools. Sporting a chrome-plated bore and barrel, this weapon's careful craftsmanship maintains a level of precision in manufacturing normally reserved for sniper weapons developed for elite Special Forces teams. The modern, composite furniture eliminates the one major problem with such heirloom firearms, which is that the wood used on the originals often ages poorly with use. The latest version is meant to last multiple lifetimes, as the composite has been fully tested for dependability and resiliency.

WINCHESTER MODEL 2024

(SPORTING RIFLE)

This classic intermediate-caliber rifle has been updated to reflect the needs of today's hunter. The lever-action has been updated by utilizing modern materials, including titanium alloy in those areas requiring the greatest torsion strength. The chamber has been coated with easy-to-clean polymers without reducing its ability to withstand the pressures created by ATF-approved propellants.

MARLIN 3468SS

(SPORTING RIFLE)

This large-caliber rifle utilizes the classic .45-70 Government cartridge, making it ideal for hunting larger North American game, and is powerful enough to handle most Awakening-related problems an outdoorsman is likely to encounter. The reinforced polymer frame is designed to endure years of rough handling in the woods, while the improved double-link system ensures a smooth cycling action.

SPRINGFIELD M1A

(SPORTING RIFLE)

A classic North American hunting rifle evolved from a century-old military design, Springfield is happy to announce a new manufacturing partner for this historically significant rifle. Our current partner has updated the rifle to accept modern attachments to meet the needs of today's shooters, including an advanced imaging sight designed to link with the shooter's PAN, helping with accuracy and eliminating missed opportunities on hunting trips. Interested customers should contact their local dealer for availability or purchase direct from our Matrix store. Please be advised, due to strong demand, Matrix orders will require three weeks for delivery.

SPRINGFIELD MODEL 1855 REPRODUCTION

(SPORTING RIFLE)

A reproduction of a two century old weapon, the 1855 has remained popular with the re-enactors of North America. - Aside from the one government purchase, most of these are in the hands of civilians. Repeating rifles don't compare well to assault rifles for most government requirements.

- The Illinois Comptroller is under investigation for that purchase, among other things. Apparently she pushed more than a couple of agencies into purchases of equipment they didn't need. The last time the state's Department of Revenue issued long arms was during the VITAS outbreak.
- Kay St. Irregular

- So they actually give a bunch of clerks and bottom-dwelling hackers rifles? I'm sure that ended well.

A modern bolt-action rifle intended for the big-game hunter, the X71 has been thoroughly redesigned to meet the grueling requirements of arctic environments. The rifle's self-diagnostic program is not as versatile as those offered through smartlink technology, but the simplicity lessens the chance of a malfunction. It's simple-to-read ammunition counter allows the shooter to quickly determine their status when hunting dangerous prey, ensuring the hunter will not become the hunted.

MARLIN 79S

(SPORTING RIFLE)

The first rifle everyone should use to learn to shoot, the 79S is a plinker's dream. The small-bore rifle is accurate, easy to maintain, and just plain fun to shoot. An additional benefit is that the ammunition is widely available and less expensive when you arrange a bulk purchase. The 79S has minimal recoil, and with its limited power cartridge, down-range incidents are less likely to happen. Marlin supports youth marksmanship programs by providing this rifle to qualified organizations, teaching the next generation how to defend themselves.

- Fianchetto

- The UCAS maintains the Civilian Markmanship Program to identify potential military recruits before they finish primary education. They also subsidize the manufacture of this type of rifle for that reason. Nothing like militarizing the kids of today to be the fodder of tomorrow's wars.
- Kay St. Irregular

- How do I get cheap ammunition and what's the discount? Figure the markup to street value and I might be able to set up a revenue source.

ULTIMAX RAIN FOREST CARBINE

(ASSAULT RIFLE)

The Ultimax Rain Forest is a short-barreled rifle designed to meet a design requirement for the Sumatran Alliance. The weapon met all of the government's criteria and has been purchased to equip the constabulary. The Rain Forest features a deep magazine well to protect the magazine from the moisture and dirt common in jungle climates. Integrating night-vision technology, the carbine is well adapted to operations under the double and triple canopies frequently encountered by users. The carbine is available through Matrix purchases as well as local retailers.

- Why would a government pay for the development of a service rifle without automatic fire capability? It's not like they'll make it illegal for themselves to own them.
- /dev/grrl

- As part of the development contract and sales agreement, Ultimax was required to offer the carbine in a minimum of three different major civilian markets. Full-auto capability would have made it illegal in too many places. Apparently the Sumatran Alliance wanted to spread out the development costs to citizens of other countries to reduce their costs.
- Mr. Bonds

- They used a large-caliber round and a short barrel, a bad combination for most applications. It has nearly as much muzzle flash as knockdown power.
- Marcos

- They were right about the scope being useful under the canopy though. I saw a few teams use one as an ambush stopper.

WINCHESTER MODEL 2067

(SPORTING RIFLE)

This the latest update to "The Gun that Won the West." It has been re-engineered to handle the chamber pressures of modern propellants and to meet current safety code. The Model 2067 uses Heavy Pistol ammunition.

- I found it interesting when I was researching the selections here that the Model 2067 is more popular in the NAN than it is in UCAS. Winchester is shipping almost three times as many units for exports as they are guns for internal consumption.
- Glitch

- The rifle is fun to shoot, but I wouldn't want to use it in a combat situation. Shooting targets is one thing, but having to reload this when it counts would be a bear.
